

Blackthorn Winter

Heartbroken by the death of her mother, Arlette de Roncier is determined that her fathers love will make up for her loss, but that love seems impossible to win because she can never be the son he so desires. The Breton castle of Huelgastel is not the easiest place to believe yourself the equal of any man, and though Arlette tries her utmost to prove herself as good as the best of the knights squires, the only way she will ever be a worthwhile offspring in her fathers eyes is to make a favorable marriage. But marriage is not what Arlette wants, especially on the counts terms. By the age of fifteen, Arelette has long been betrothed - a political alliance - to a man who is more than three times her age. In the nearby village of Locmariaquer, Raymond Herevi sits and waits, licking the wounds that de Ronciers men inflicted when they overran his fathers manor. Raymond has lost his family, his heritage and his good looks to de Ronciers thugs and is determined on revenge. When Raymond arrives at the gate of Huelgastel, disguised as a would-be squire, Arlette immediately catches his eye. Her glossy red hair is a beacon that draws him across France to the Aquitaine, where she is to join her betrothed. But the paths of love and vengeance rarely run true and not until almost a decade has passed does the feud between the Herevis and de Ronciers reach its tragic conclusion...
