

Where Destiny Led Me

Where Destiny Led me is a collection of four short stories about difficult times in the 1930s and 1940s when money was scarce and people were loyal and dedicated to their country. People worked hard, made an honest living, and were proud to serve their country. These short stories are heartwarming and true to life, depicting the experiences of four unique and special characters and the choices made at the crossroads of war and tragedy. Ron Bolduc was born on May 6, 1932, in South Peabody, Massachusetts; he was one of nine children. Times were difficult and money was so scarce, Ron and his siblings worked on the farm to contribute to the family income. He married his wife, Mim, fifty-eight years ago, and together they raised their son and daughter in the town of Danvers, Massachusetts. As the owner of Bolduc Electrical for thirty-six years, he provided a substantial living for his family until he passed the business to his son, Mike, upon his retirement. Ron was a long time member of the Masons, was active in Seabees, flew small airplanes for Civil Air Patrol, and was involved in many childrens charities. Snowmobiling, making wooden toys, and spending time with his six grandchildren and four great-grandchildren are just a few of his hobbies. He and his wife currently live in Brownville, Maine, where he is enjoying his retirement and writing short stories.
