

Mackintosh and the Cuckoo (The Mackintosh stories)

In the fourth story about Mackintosh, the dissolute artist and former lecturer, our hero has found a home with Sandy, an affluent widow living on the fringes of Hampstead. His latest incarnation as a counsellor is so successful that painting is relegated to his spare time. This comfortable state is interrupted when Sandys son Justin, an Edinburgh banker, is made redundant and descends on the household. Each man sees his interests as being threatened by the other and only one can retain Sandys affections. Mackintosh knows that he is in the weaker position, particularly as his drinking arouses increasing criticism. And he wants to devote more time to painting, which is difficult with his new career. Once again Mackintosh is forced to make life-changing decisions.
